Editor-in-Chief, Journal of Health and Pollution (JHP)

Journal of Health and Pollution

Aims:

- publish high-quality research, reviews, and commentaries that address environmental health in regions and communities with less-developed research infrastructure
- showcase work by researchers and practitioners from lower-resource areas on topics of particular importance to these communities

Scope:

- open to submissions from any discipline that examines the relationship between the environment and human health
- define “pollution” broadly to include any environmental agent that is suspected or known to adversely affect human health

Journal of Health and Pollution

- EHP Publishing publishes Journal of Health and Pollution (JHP) with support from the NIEHS
- Joined EHP Publishing program in 2022 as sister journal to EHP
- Completely open access – no subscriptions, no paywalls, and no author fees
- Continuous publication
- Will feature a wide range of environmental health topics, including health effects due to climate change, biodiversity loss and ecosystem degradation

Author eligibility:

- primary and corresponding authors of a manuscript must reside in a lower-resource area
- goal is to promote equitable research partnerships while also filling global evidence gaps, regardless of economic status

Equitable research partnerships:

- investigators from local communities primarily conduct the science, may involve or consult scientists from higher-resource settings
- manuscripts resulting from 'helicopter research' will not be considered for peer review or publication

Journal of Health and Pollution

Notable updates:

- Redesigned website experience hosts all JHP content including the full archive of past publications and newly published content
- Editorial Manager is open for submissions
- JHP Deputy Editor team
- Global Engagement Program Analyst position
 - EHP Publishing is hiring a new team member to lead global engagement and capacity strengthening efforts for both JHP and EHP
